

Computer Vision

Image Classification

Image classification assigns an image to one or more predefined categories. Neural networks can learn visual features automatically from labeled images.

Object Detection

Object detection identifies objects in an image and estimates their locations. Detection systems commonly produce bounding boxes and class labels.

Image Segmentation

Image segmentation divides an image into meaningful regions. Semantic segmentation assigns a class to pixels, while instance segmentation separates individual objects.